

This building is the home of Albert Coates' famed Institute which serves as a laboratory in which to study the problems of state, city, county, and federal officials. The building was dedicated in 1939 immediately after its construction, which was estimated to be $50,000. A majority of the funds were provided through private contributions, the institute at that time not being a part of the university itself. It was in 1942 that it was made a division of the university.
